An Accessible, Barrier-Free California

Inclusive and equal opportunities for all!

Our mission.

To promote disability access across California through education, dialogue, and collaboration with stakeholders.

About us.

Established in 2009, the California Commission on Disability Access (CCDA) serves as an information resource to the public and as a research arm by collecting and analyzing legal complaints on all alleged physical-access and website accessibility violations among places of business in California.

Who we serve.

The CCDA serves the disability community, businesses, building professionals, the legal community, and local governments.

We believe by working together with those we serve, we can reduce violations of access compliance among businesses by providing resources and tools.

What we do.

We gather access violation data to determine educational outreach opportunities for the public, and develop access tools for businesses, building professionals, and stakeholders to utilize.

We coordinate with state and local governments to implement access programs to minimize access barriers among places of business in their communities.

Get involved.

The CCDA hosts regular accessible public meetings, forums, and outreach events. Attend one of our public events to learn about our latest activities.
